Student Teaching From SEPT. To DEC.'97

This evaluative statement attempts to describe areas of professional competence and needs for continued growth of prospective teachers who are recommended for initial employment. Information concerning student teaching and other professional experiences is summarized with the specific purpose of facilitating the selection of candidates most likely to succeed in any teaching situation.

Marianne DeMarco successfully completed during the Fall '97 semester all of the student teaching requirements to be recommended to the New York State Education Department for provisional certification as an elementary teacher in all subject areas for grades nursery through six.

Her semester of student teaching was carried out in the Garden City Stratford Elementary School in grades two and four. Marianne was an outstanding student teacher in all areas of performance. Her lesson plans were models both in written format and in execution. The time she spent on creating colorful visuals and planning a variety of activities for each lesson paid off in the responses she received from her students when she taught her lessons. She has a natural instinct on how to shape a lesson to meet the needs of her students and to make the subject matter interesting and meaningful.

Marianne was a student in two other courses that I taught and I still use her materials to demonstrate to other students what the product of our assignments should be. There is no doubt that she will be successful in any elementary school teaching assignment she undertakes at the primary grade or intermediate grade level.
